

The Home of Translation comes to Germany

The Home of Translation, one of France's leading language services firms, is seeking to extend its reach to other European countries, including Germany.

While the company has a large number of partners – both clients and suppliers – in many European countries, the majority of its operations are still centred in France. In the coming months this is set to change, as The Home of Translation looks to extend its services beyond French borders.

A great long-term future

“We believe the language services sector in general, and our company is particular, have a great long-term future in Europe,” comments Peter Hancock, co-founder of The Home of Translation. “A lot of the current and future technology being developed in our industry has its roots in Europe. One of the reasons we are seeking to extend our services to Germany is that most language services providers in the country have embraced this technology – as have their clients”.

A stand at Expolingua

In one of the first steps on this journey, The Home of Translation will have a stand at Expolingua Berlin, Europe's leading trade show for languages, on 16-17 November, 2018. Described as the “must-attend event for anyone with an interest in foreign languages”, Expolingua was a natural choice for The Home of Translation.

“Expolingua seems to mirror our company in many ways. It's passionate about languages, it's dynamic, it embraces all cultures, and it likes to have fun,” says Peter Hancock. “We'll be delighted to welcome all-comers to our stand and show them how we can help them in all their language needs: translation, interpreting, subtitling, copywriting, and all language services generally. Looking forward to seeing you there!”

About The Home of Translation

The Home of Translation was founded in 1997. The company and its translators and interpreters have built up extensive expertise in the financial and legal fields, as well as in medicine, pharmaceuticals, agribusiness, CSR and many others, serving some 600 clients on a regular basis.

The Home of Translation has ISO 17100 and ISO 9001 certification.

More info: www.home-of-translation.com/